U.S. Supreme Court Justice Warns Against Misuse Of Mass Communications To Inflame Nation

U.S. Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas warned of the power of an efficient mass media of communications to cause tensions to quickly possess an entire nation. The speaker further warned: "If the bigots command the platform and occupy the editorial desks, the Rule of Law degenerates into a regime of whim and caprice."

Justice Douglas spoke before several hundred leaders and representatives of Bnai Zion, American Fraternal Zionist Organization, as well as prominent jurists and representatives of other communal and civic organizations at the New York Hilton Hotel following the presentation to him of the First Bnai Zion Bill of Rights award in the form of a scroll and $1,000 in cash at special ceremonies on the occasion of the 172nd Bill of Rights Day which was observed.

Justice Douglas was unanimously selected as recipient of the award by the American Affairs Committee of Bnai Zion as "the American who has rendered the most outstanding service for the advancement of the basic tenets of freedom, equality, and justice embodied in the Bill of Rights."

The presentation of the award was made by Supreme Court Justice Arthur Markewich, of New York State, former president of Bnai Zion. The principal address was delivered by Norman G. Levine, president of Bnai Zion. Edward Sharf, chairman of the American Affairs Committee, and a national vice-president of Bnai Zion, presided.

Congressman Abraham J. Multer, a national vice-president of Bnai Zion, presented a $1,000 Savings Bond as an award to Steven A. Mayer, of Manhattan, and Robert Feldman, of Brooklyn, children of Bnai Zion members, for the best essays on the theme "What the Bill of Rights Means to Me."

In his address accepting the award, Justice Douglas referring to the British victory of the battle of Brandywine on September 11, 1777, quoted Tom Paine's communication written the following day when it seemed that Philadelphia might fall:

"Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom, must, like men, undergo the fatigues of supporting it. The event of yesterday was one of those kinds of alarms which is just sufficient to rouse us to duty, without being of consequence enough to depress our fortitude. It is not a field of a few acres of ground, but a cause, that we are defending, and whether we defeat the enemy in one battle, or by degrees, the consequences will be the same."

Justice Douglas then said: "We have moved a long way down the stream of history since the date of Brandywine. But issues as inflammatory as the results of that battle possess us. Racial differences, religious differences, ideological differences ignite communities; and nowadays we live so close to each other and have become interdependent so that tensions, transmitted by efficient mass media of communications, can quickly possess an entire nation."

The speaker further cautioned: "When, therefore, pleas are made that the end justifies the means, emotions can be easily aroused; and the immobilization of people may be as dangerous to the Rule of Law as the summoning of a mob." Justice Douglas then emphasized that man's only safety from the jungle of passions is the Rule of Law, adding that "We know in quiet moments of repose that steadfast rules are needed to govern those bursts of anger when emotions break the dams of self-control and carry people pell-mell on angry waters."

Justice Douglas referred to an article written by Dr. Edmond Cahn, of New York University Law School, on the underlying lawlessness in civilized countries. Justice Douglas said: "Cahn writes about one case where 'it was convenient for the city and its merchants that someone, almost anyone, be found, identified, and convicted.'"

In his address, Justice Douglas further asserted that the use of force against the opposition is part and parcel of Communist ideology and education. "Mimeographed pamphlets in Latin America show in detail how to kill a non-cooperative villager; how to make an auto into a bomb; how to use household furniture as a barricade. Some think that this infection has reached the Free World."

Justice Douglas, referring to the recent question posed by I. F. Stone: "How many of us did not welcome the assassination of Diem and his brother Nhu in South Vietnam?", said: "Do we reach for the dagger, or the gun, in our thinking, when it suits our political view to do so? Do we ever believe that the end justifies the means? Do we favor murder, when it comes to our own hated opponents?"

Dwelling on recent events in the South, Justice Douglas told of former Governor LeRoy Collins, of Florida, who recently talked about the decent people who "remained cravenly silent or lamely defensive while rabble-housers incited sick souls to violence." He spoke of the urgent need for decent people to tell "the bloody shirt-wavers to climb down off the backboards of bigotry."

Justice Douglas said that while he spoke essentially of racial problems in a Southern framework of reference, what he said is also good for the North and the East and the West, as well, on racial issues; on the wheat sale to Russia; on the test ban treaty; and on all questions that deeply stir the emotions of our people."

Justice Douglas, in his address, voiced the belief that: "Our people, South as well as North, East, and West, are dedicated to a Rule of Law. I believe that they would re-adopt the Bill of Rights today (including the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments) if they were given the opportunity for sober thought and reflection. But even the world over, war was an emotional thing before it was an intellectual one. Emotions often carry a particular day. That is why reglementation by defined procedure is essential in a Rule of Law."

Bond Sales Total Was $69 Million; $55 Million From U.S.

A record sum of $49,172,050 in Israel bonds was sold last year in the U.S. and in Western nations for the development of Israel's economy, Dr. Joseph J. Schwartz, vice president of the Israel Bond Organization, reported to more than 200 Jewish leaders from the U.S. and Canada at a two-day national planning conference of the organization's board of governors at the Waldorf-Astoria, in New York.

Of the total, $55,471,000 was sold in the U.S.; $4,807,750 in Canada; $4,544,000 in Latin America; and $4,807,000 in Western Europe. Since 1951 when the first Israel bond campaign was started in New York, $640,704,000 in Israel bonds has been sold.

In a breakdown of the bond receipts, Dr. Schwartz said slightly more than that $17 million had been allocated for agriculture, including $6.5 million in loans for new settlements; $1.4 million in loans to increase agricultural production; and $1.04 million for irrigation projects.

His report revealed that other allocations included $13.9 million for industry, including $9 million in loans to develop industrial enterprises and workshops; $1.2 million in loans to develop mines and mineral resources; $6.1 million for electric power facilities; and $400,600 for oil drilling and exploration.

Transportation was allocated slightly more than $13 million, including $7.1 million for ports and harbors; $800,000 for railroads; $6 million for shipping; $1.4 million for civil aviation; and $3.5 million for communications. Expenditures of $12.7 million went into the housing and construction projects.

ISRAEL EXPECTS ANOTHER BOOM YEAR BUT ECONOMISTS FEAR INFLATION AS A MAJOR CONCERN

Israel enjoyed her second successive boom year in 1963 and the expectations are for a continuation this year. Prices did not rise appreciably, imports declined, exports went up and so did the nation's foreign currency reserves. The money supply increased too, and this has the experts worried, says the New York Times.

All in all, 1963 was one of the best years economically in Israel's 15-year history. The economists are delighted, but some factors have them scratching their heads.

The question of price stability has become the mystique of the Government. And this stability is threatened more than anything else by the continuing and excessive expansion of the money supply.

Consumer prices rose 10 per cent in 1962, which was considered too much in a country that has averaged rises of three to six per cent. In the first 10 months of last year prices were up only three per cent, but there were indications that the figure might come closer to five per cent by the end of the year.

At the same time the money supply swelled by 25 to 30 per cent. Theoretically, this should have given a sharp upward impulse to prices, but it did not. Consumers, reacting positively to the Government campaign to induce an atmosphere of stability, showed restraint and the main force of the monetary expansion — which came primarily from German restitution payments and foreign investment — was directed toward [illegible]

The psychological atmosphere was sustained by Government decisions, backed by both labor and management, to hold down direct and indirect taxes, wages and profits and to limit liquidity through credit restrictions and compulsory savings plans.

The intention is to continue this stabilization effort into 1964. But a cloud is looming. Wage contracts come up for renewal and it seems unlikely that the Government will be able to avoid the payment of a four to five per cent increment to the cost-of-living allowance and a basic wage increase of three to four per cent for lower income groups.

The question is whether manufacturers will agree to absorb the increases without raising prices. With wages frozen last year, the manufacturers accepted the Government's dictates on prices, says the New York Times. Now the situation has changed, and difficult negotiations already have commenced among the Government and labor and management.

One of the most pleasant developments last year was the reduction in the trade deficit. A nation deficient in raw materials, Israel has steadily imported more than she has exported. In 1962, imports rose 20 per cent over those of the previous year.

Last year, however, imports rose only five per cent, or $50 million from the 1962 figure of $950 million. Exports, on the other hand, jumped from $500 million in 1962 to $600 million last year, for an increase of 20 per cent. Thus the trade gap was reduced from $450 million in 1962 to $400 million last year.

Baruch, "Adviser To Presidents," Speaks At 93, To Retired Workers, On Inflation

Bernard M. Baruch, of New York, prescribed "massive doses of self-discipline" by government, industry, and labor as a preventive and cure for inflation in a speech to pensioners of the Joint Industry Board of the Electrical Industry.

The 93-year-old financier spoke to 600 retired members of Local 3, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, at the New York Hilton Hotel, says the New York Times. Mr. Baruch called on the group to resist programs that lead to inflation, which he described as a special threat to those living on fixed incomes.

One cause of the "insidious and deadly economic disease," he said, was the conduct of some sections of business and some elements of labor "whose price and wage policies are based not on what is economically justified, not on what is in the nation's interest, but on what the traffic will bear."

Mr. Baruch declared:

"I wish that the same kind of intelligence and cooperation which labor, industry, and government have demonstrated on the question of retirement could be brought to bear on other labor-management problems. We must find a way to settle labor management conflicts more amicably and constructively, in the interest of the public, than has been the case in the past."

Harry Van Arsdale, business agent for the local, and president of the New York City Central Labor Council, told the luncheon that retired members would soon number 3,000, and that increased

Her veil of tulle illusion was floor length, held by a pill-box hat; and she carried a spray of white orchids, and lilies-of-the-valley. Mrs. Leonard Constantine was her cousin's matron of honour. She wore a fitted, blue-green, iridescent, brocade gown; with a trumpet-shaped skirt; also a seed-pearl-beaded tiara; and carried a cascade bouquet of white orchids, and blue stephanotis. Sheryl Constantine, aged twelve years, cousin of the bride, was an attendant. For the reception in the Versailles Room, the tables were decorated with candelabra, and gold-coloured and yellow roses. Mrs. Gold, mother of the bride, was in a sheath gown of forest-green velvet the straight skirt of which was made with beaded front panels; and had a satin headdress. Mrs. Glick, mother of the groom, wore a gown of paddy-green, chiffon velvet; and a headdress of matching tulle. Their flowers were corsages of white orchids. THE JEWISH COMMITMENT TO HUMAN RIGHTS IS AS OLD AS THE JEWISH PEOPLE

The World Jewish Congress statement on the fifteenth anniversary of the United Nations Declaration of Human rights was leather bound and presented to U. E. U. Thant, Secretary-General, United Nations, New York:

The Jewish commitment to human rights is as old as the Jewish people. It was from the Hebrew Scriptures that we derived the doctrine of the divine origin of the human personality and consequently of its rights: "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."

The Hebrew Prophets taught us that human rights are sustained by sanctions that lie beyond the reach of governments and human authority, and that in their just and creative exercise lies the promise of a warless world founded on freedom and justice. This doctrine, consistently renewed and developed by the sages and philosophers of the Jewish tradition, is today part of the substance of any expression of the Jewish heritage, religious or secular.

The faith that this teaching has nurtured in us has been reinforced by the centuries of an unique and often tragic experience. Powerful despotisms in the ancient world and tyrannies in the succeeding centuries, most tragically in our own, have seen in the Jew the symbol of resistance, of self-determination and of freedom; and they have sought, by methods as ruthless as the evil doctrine which impelled them, to destroy him.

It was against this background, and while multitudes of our fellow Jews in the concentration camps of Nazi Europe were still waiting for deliverance through death or liberation, that we came to San Francisco in 1945. In common with other non-governmental organizations we urged on the delegations to the founding conference of the United Nations to make it one of the fundamental purposes of the new organization to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and to provide in the Charter for the necessary institutions and procedures to serve this end. We recall with satisfaction that this purpose was achieved and that all member nations are required under the Charter to pledge themselves to take joint and separate action to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms.

It was, and has remained, at once a source of encouragement and a challenge that non-governmental organizations made a contribution of crucial importance in the adoption of these historic decisions.

The World Jewish Congress was the first Jewish body to be accorded consultative status under Article 71 of the Charter. In its first submission to the United Nations it reaffirmed its total commitment to the task of co-operating in the human rights activity of the organization, and to do so on the basis of its faith in "the common origin, the common right and the common destiny of all mankind."

Since then it has endeavored to make every contribution within its capacity in the work of organs of the United Nations dealing with human rights questions. In particular it sought to make a contribution, based on its own distinctive experience, in its submissions, both written and oral, to the formulation of the Universal Declaration.

The fifteenth anniversary of the proclamation of the Universal Declaration is for us a time of commemoration, not only because the text embodies formulations for which we had worked and hoped, but because it embodies a challenge to the present membership of the United Nations. We see in the observance of this anniversary an opportunity to recall that the authors of the Universal Declaration conceived of it as the first step in the development of an International Bill of Rights, including a Covenant and Measures of Implementation, through which the international community could acquire the means not only to promote respect for human rights but to ensure their observance and protection.

The World Jewish Congress, which comprises Jewish communities and representative bodies in more than sixty countries of the most varied political and social systems, takes the opportunity to salute the highest permanent representative of the international community who, in his own right, has given inspiring and devoted leadership in the ceaseless quest for a better and freer world for all men in which, in the words of our Prophet, "none shall make them afraid."

We live in an age which has witnessed both the emancipation of many nations and unexampled advances in man's mastery of natural forces. It remains for man still to master the prejudices and intolerances which his ignorance and his failure to use his own resources of moral courage and imagination have created, and which erect barriers between him and the fulfillment of his highest hopes.

On behalf of those for whom we have the honor to speak, we take this opportunity of the fifteenth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights to pledge all our resources, in cooperation with the men and women of all faiths and peoples who share our vision, to the task of securing the fulfilment of the promise implicit in the act of the General Assembly fifteen years ago. And in doing so we renew our expression of unabated confidence in Your Excellency's leadership in one of the most urgent tasks of our time.

This has only happened once before, in 1958-59. Economists are not yet certain why all imports, except for consumer goods, dropped so sharply. One explanation is that manufacturers drew heavily on the stocks built up before and after the devaluation of the Israeli pound in 1962.

Ideally, should exports be increased by 20 per cent a year and imports held to an increase of eight per cent annually for the next five years, the trade gap could be lowered by 1969 to what the experts in Israel consider would be a manageable deficiency of $250 million to $300 million. However, the economists are not optimistic about maintaining last year's trend.

Citrus and citrus by-products, cut and polished diamonds, and the metals industry accounted for about 65 per cent of the increase in exports. The disastrous winters that hurt the citrus crops in Europe and the United States, says the New York Times, provided a ready market for Israeli sales abroad.

Foreign investment in Israel, despite tactical successes by the Arab League boycott, continued to expand from $52 million in 1961 to $85 million in 1962 and roughly $110 million last year. Opinion is divided on whether the increase represents speculative or long-term investment. The Government, of course, favors selective long-term investments.

Another satisfactory development has been the sustained growth of the nation's foreign currency reserves. They expanded from $400 million in 1962 to an estimated total of $500 million last year, this made it possible for Israel to settle debts amounting to $50 million three to five years in advance of their due date.

Other signs listed by the Government as pointing to more prosperity were the strong demand for public works and the high rate of private consumer spending. Retail sales in recent months were running about eight per cent ahead of the year before.

The strain to which the country's economic seams are being put is a major concern. The threat of inflation as the cost of living continues to rise at an annual rate of about four per cent, says the New York Times, is viewed as a threat to the country's traditional financial and social stability.

It was at this point that Justice Douglas sounded the warning of the consequences in the event that "bigots command the platforms and occupy the editorial desks" which, he said, would lead to the Rule of Law degenerating into a regime of whim and caprice. The speaker urged that it is the "eternal task to persuade perceptive people to be outspoken on matters of principle."

Dwelling on the meaning of the Bill of Rights and its effectiveness as an instrumentality for the safeguarding of human dignity, Justice Douglas said:

"The stature of judges is of course important. But the Bill of Rights, its procedural as well as its substantive guarantees, is vital in a particular community only when the pulpits are strong and vocal behind the Rule of Law; only when the school boards are alert and unafraid; only when parent-teachers associations, chambers of commerce, Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, newspapers, radio and TV, and all other community groups promote an understanding of the Bill of Rights, and in times of storm and crisis, as well as on calm occasions, stand against the bigots and on the side of the Rule of Law.

"This makes the task of living under a Rule of Law a difficult one. The structure we build is never completed; it is always in danger not so much of being torn down as depreciating by neglect.

"Those who first spoke of the need of eternal vigilance have warned from the beginning of the high price a people pay for life under a Rule of Law. But those who have walked under the stars, breathing deeply the air of a Free Society, know that another kind of life would be unbearable," he concluded.

Preceding the program, a memorial service for the late President John F. Kennedy was conducted by Rabbi William Berkowits, of Congregation Bnai Jeshurun, a national vice-president of Bnai Zion. The memorial prayer was chanted by Cantor Herman L. Sanders.

Dr. Harris J. Levine, chairman of the Bnai Zion Foundation, announced that the Evaluation and Therapeutic Center for Mentally Retarded Children which is now being built in Kfar Hashwedi, Jerusalem, by Bnai Zion, will be named for the late President John F. Kennedy who, throughout his life, took a vital interest in the problem of the mentally retarded.

pension payments, although unspecified, had been agreed upon.

He also said that efforts must be made to reduce the retirement age.

The Union, he said, is greatly concerned over unemployment resulting from automation. The 35-hour week, he said, is already in effect for "our efforts at a four-hour-day." He said that new members, unaware of the progress the Union had made, predicted other problems.

Some, he continued, are unwilling to work at $7 an hour on signal maintenance in the subways "because it is dusty down there, they don't want to work evenings and there is the third rail."

The pensioners also heard a report on the Electric Industry Center being built at Parsons Boulevard and Jewel Avenue, Flushing, Queens, says the New York Times. It will include recreational and social facilities for union members.

BOND SALES TOTAL

In another report, Abraham Feinberg, president of the Israel Bond Organization, said that the success of the campaign had resulted from two factors — "first, American confidence in the ability of the people of Israel to build a dynamic democracy, and second, their impressive achievement, with the aid of Israel bond funds, in planting the seeds of prosperity in an undeveloped land."

Mr. Feinberg said that Israel's population last year had increased by 100,000 to 2,480,000, and that employment had risen by approximately five per cent. He said that the number of unemployed was down to 4,200 last year from 4,600 in 1962.

Hyman Brown, distinguished radio and television producer and director, was presented with a silver medal for presenting the organization's three Hanukkah festivals at Madison Square Garden, which were viewed by more than 58,000 persons.

The conference paid tribute to the late Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, American Zionist leader, and the late Herbert H. Lehman, both of whom had been active in the campaigns of the Israel Bond Organization.
